START WITH THE DECISION

Find the project behind the brochure.

A memorable marketing name is useful for an advert. A property decision also needs the correct project record.

Use a project identifier.

DLD's Project Status Enquiry accepts a land number, project number or project name. Use the identifier that matches the project you are assessing.

Read the result in context.

The service provides project details and a completion percentage. Keep the exact project identity beside the result so similar names do not get mixed together.

A percentage is not a promise.

Treat the reported figure as project information. Do not turn it into your own guaranteed handover date or a conclusion about an individual unit.

Keep two records side by side.

A practical review: compare the official project result with the dated developer update. Note differences as questions rather than silently choosing the nicer number.

Ask about the difference.

Save the project identifier, the result you saw and when you checked it. If records disagree, ask for an explanation tied to that same project.
