

Buy a share. Find an exit.

A property token makes ownership smaller. It does not make finding a buyer automatic.

Original diagrams. Sources checked 11 October 2026.

This month, the exit question.

PRYPCO Mint's October report looks at liquidity: how easily an owner can sell. It is the operator's report.

OCTOBER 2026

Operator report: building liquidity

SELLER

MARKET

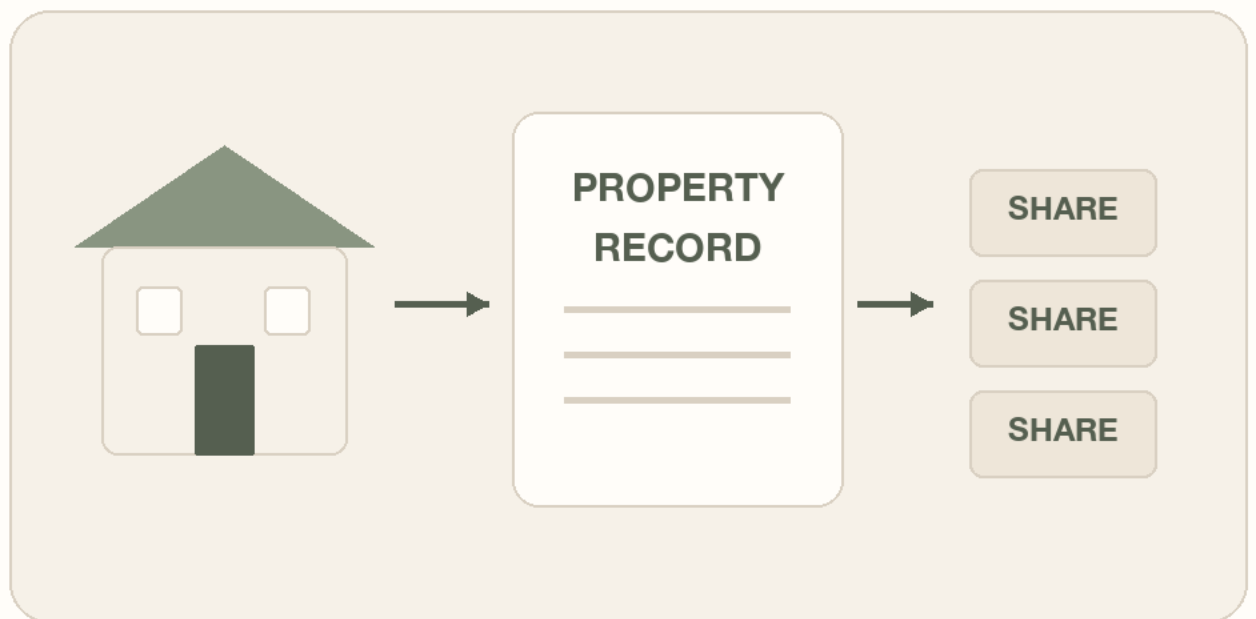

BUYER?

A trading venue is not a promised buyer.

Original diagrams. Sources checked 11 October 2026.

A token points to a real property.

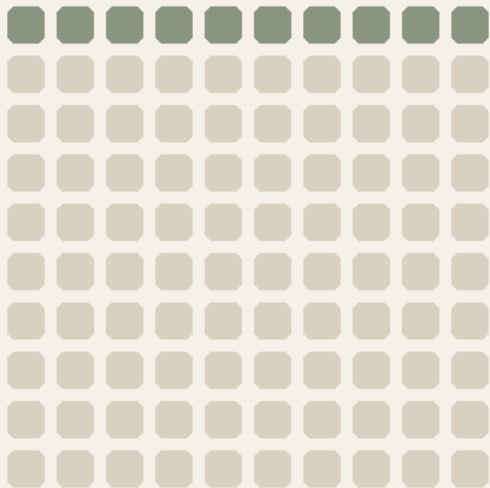

On PRYPCO Mint, a token represents a fractional interest in a specific property, with legal records and terms.

Original diagrams. Sources checked 11 October 2026.

10 out of 100. That is 10%.

In this simplified example, 10 equal shares out of 100 represent 10% of the property. Not one particular room.

10 / 100

10%

Fictional equal-share illustration

Fictional numbers on slides 4-5. No actual property is offered.

Rent comes in. Costs come out.

A share of net rental income is different from a share of the rent collected. Property expenses still matter.

Rent collected	$10,000
Property costs	- $3,000
Net rental income	$7,000

10% share of $7,000 = $700

Fictional numbers on slides 4-5. No actual property is offered.

Listed for sale. Not sold yet.

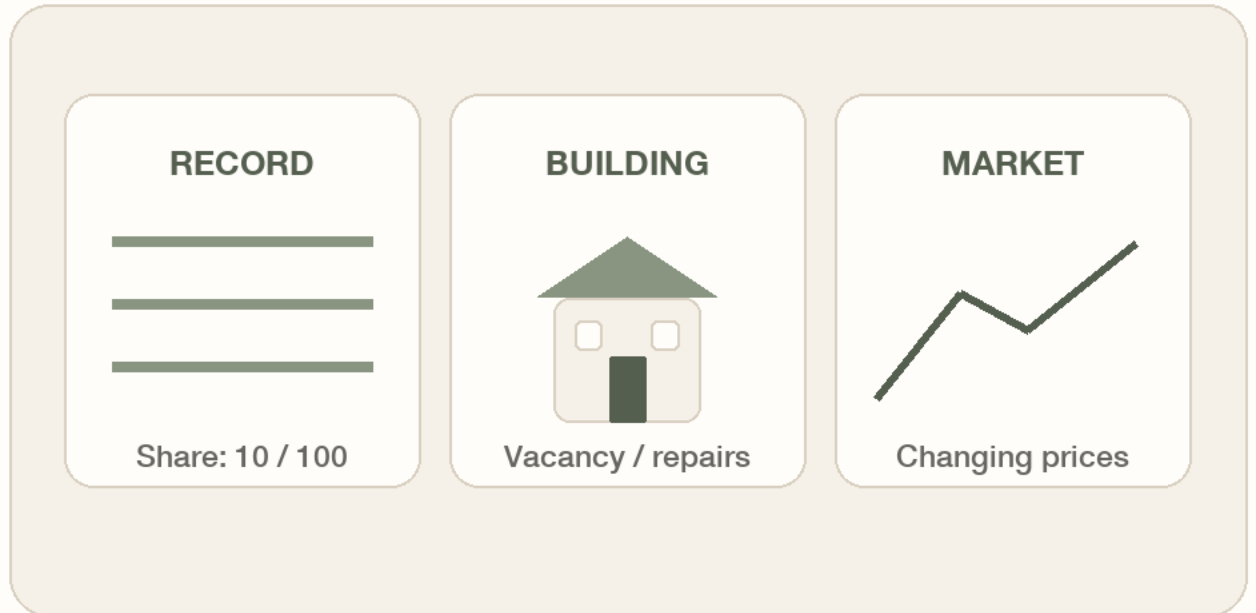

Liquidity means being able to turn an investment into cash. A digital listing still needs demand and an agreed price.

Original diagrams. Sources checked 11 October 2026.

Digital records. Physical realities.

The building can still be empty, need repairs or fall in value. A blockchain record does not remove those risks.

Original diagrams. Sources checked 11 October 2026.

Understand the way back out.

Look at the property, ownership rights, resale rules, buyer demand and fees. The share and the exit are two different things.

01 Which property and ownership rights?

02 What can reduce the net rental income?

03 Who can buy, and under which rules?

04 What are all the costs of entry and exit?

Fictional numbers on slides 4-5. No actual property is offered.